

Now, our first picture is this:

This picture, is just 😏
*. I mean look at it, the face IT make. Imagine flashing your flashlight at the dark corner of your house and you got this, staring at you, with ITS f*ckin horrifying smile.

Anyway, where does this picture came from? What is the origin? Let's deep into our investigation:

- For reference, I take this image from KnowYourMeme website (where people talk and discuss about the meme culture).
- In the real site, we can see a link that is supposed to be source of this REAL meme, which is from Reddit.
- The post was made by a reddit, Jneum23, about a year ago (from now, 1 Oct 2022).
- And after scrolling down the comment section, I may have found some clues about the origin of this picture:

1) Redditor NinjaDude2112 said,

2) ShacoTrickshots, who said that it looks like soyjak?

3) And last but not least,

not

• And other evidence is from Jneum himself. He said that he just found it randomly Google.

on

• After all the guesses, we can start the real investigation.

MANDELA CATALOGUE?

This one is a guess from NinjaDude2112, and to be honest, this is maybe the most logical answer for our question. Since the Mandela Catalogue itself is... YK... Spooky. Now I don't think I need to explain about this ARG, because it is one of the most popular "rabbit hole" on the internet.

Back to our investigation:

- After looking every Alex Kister video from a year ago, I conclude, that this image is not from Mandela Catalogue analog horror series. Even when it is from Mandela Catalogue, we still need to find where the image was taken from.

So... That was boring

SOYJAK?

Soyjak is an internet slang term referring to a facial expression associated with men described as nu-male or Soy Boys who are photographed expressing surprise or excitement with their mouth agape. Online, a variation of Wojak referred to as "Soyjak" is illustrated with the open-mouthed smile¹.

And from the description, it can be a soyjak that is edited to be "scary":

- And, after scrolling down and seeing all of this picture... The chance for this image to be a soyjak edit is low, because when people modified the soyjak format, they tend to keep the style of it (which is like a MS paint masterpiece), and this image is a whole different feeling. The image really give you feeling of uncanniness and uncomfot, while the soyjak one seems to be "just-a-joke"

TOMMY TAFFY?

Who? Idk man.
